Shell India developed another chatbot, POC (proof of concept), in (Q4 of FY17), using Facebook messenger artificial intelligence (AI) platform for automotive customers. Its focus is on product knowledge, identifying matching lubes for vehicles, and online purchase. Through higher user engagement, there would be more brand engagement.

Tripathy said Shell was working closely with commercial fleet customers in building sensor-driven data consolidation to improve operational efficiency and safety management for trucks. It has already partnered with five fleet owners who have 300-500 trucks.

The company also has an analytics platform where it is building data warehouse, integrating ERP data sets and automating through machine-learning technology to drive diagnostic and predictive analytics. Visualisation and customised dashboard can be viewed in real time by employees to make more informed business decision.

Tripathy said they were working with original equipment manufacturers (OEMs) to meet the emission standards; Shell has a tie-up with Tata for Shell Rimula, which the company claims gives 6-10 per cent fuel saving.

Shell has a 12 per cent share in the global lubricants market. It is the number one in the US, the largest market worldwide. In China, which is the second-largest market, it is the strongest international company with close to 10 per cent market share. India is the third-largest market for Shell where it has close to a 5 per cent share.

In India, the industry segment for lubricants has largely been stagnant at less than one per cent growth. Within the industry, demand from agriculture and construction is increasing, and from mining and power is declining. In the case of commercial vehicles, there is a decline because new trucks are more efficient. In bikes, the lubricant demand is growing at 5-6 per cent, while it's less than 1.8 per cent for cars. But overall, at 2.3 per cent, India is one of the fastest growing markets in the world.
